SMC graduate talks 43 years in nursing

By JOHN EBY
Southwestern Michigan College

DOWAGIAC — Kathy (Eby) Mikel, a 1981 Southwestern Michigan College nursing graduate, "retired" last June from South Bend's Memorial Hospital after almost 43 years.

Memorial, a 647-bed hospital, is part of Beacon Health System.

"I worked as an RN in NICU for 10 years and on the mother/baby unit as a lactation consultant for more than 32 years," she said.

Neonatal Intensive Care Units are specialized hospital departments for newborns, typically under 28 days old, requiring advanced, around-the-clock medical attention for premature birth (before 37 weeks), low birth weight or severe health conditions.

"I help new moms and babies with breast feeding difficulties," she said. "I did strictly NICU staff nursing for 10 years. Then I started having my own children and got into lactation consulting, and that became my passion in nursing.

"We did a lot of education to get babies to nurse, to learn to latch on if they're struggling."

When she graduated from SMC, her first job was in Fort Wayne at Lutheran Hospital for 10 months before moving back to northern Indiana.

Mikel, of Wakarusa, managed to stay idle for three months before returning in October to working "two to four days a month when I want to or after seeing what the weather's doing. After 43 years, I just didn't think I could quit cold turkey. I still loved what I was doing. I guess working in one facility for so many years is kind of unusual anymore, but I loved what I was doing and I liked working at Memorial, so I stayed."

Pink uniforms and volleyball

Her class contained 31 associate degrees and 33 one-year practical nursing students.

Nurses wore pink uniforms and were capped rather than pinned. Men received chevron bars.

Eileen Parks, "intimidating" dean of the nursing school, conducted the ceremony.

"I also played volleyball," Mikel said, "and Dean Parks didn't like her students to do anything else than be in the nursing program."

After graduating from NorthWood High School in Nappanee – part of the Wa-Nee Community School System shared with Wakarusa – Mikel started college at Indiana University in Bloomington.

"After freshman year I transferred up to SMC to get my nursing degree," she said. "I knew I wanted a health care field, though I wasn't sure what that was when I graduated high school."

Family members influenced her decision to pursue nursing.

'No justice, no peace'

Family of BH man speak out, await autopsy results

By LOUISE WREGE

BENTON HARBOR — About 30 people gathered Thursday on the steps of Benton Harbor City Hall, saying there will be no peace until the truth is told about how 24-year-old Timothy Johnson died last month.

"I'm just going to keep saying, 'Justice for Tim,' ... because my brother was murdered, and it was racially motivated," alleged Isheria Jackson, Johnson's sister, during the rally and news conference.

Johnson, of Benton Harbor, was found dead on May 24 from what appeared to be a fatal hit and run on M-152 and Pleasant Street in Silver Creek Township, according to the Cass County Sheriff's Office.

Cass County Sheriff Clint Roach said during a news conference last week that based on car parts found at the scene, they are looking for a 2010-12 Ford Taurus that is possibly black in color. He said an autopsy is being done by the Western Michigan University Medical Examiner's Office to determine the cause of death. Roach said the report is not expected to be available for 30-90 days.

He said the medical examiner's office told his office they have not released information to anyone concerning the death, including Johnson's family. When contacted Thursday after the rally, Roach said he had nothing further to add at this time.

Underground Railroad Days set for July 11-12

By MAXWELL HARDEN
max.harden@leaderpub.com

VANDALIA — The Underground Railroad Society of Cass County MI and the Village of Vandalia will partner for the annual Underground Railroad Days from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday, July 11, and Sunday, July 12.

Festivities will be centered in the Village of Vandalia, as well as four nearby Underground Railroad stations.

Underground Railroad Days celebrates the legacy of the Underground Railroad in Cass County, particularly the area around Vandalia – Calvin, Porter and Penn Townships – known as "Young's Prairie" at the time. The UGRR existed in this area from 1830 to 1860 and it is estimated about 1,500 fugitive slaves passed through this area on their way to Canada. Many stayed for a time and worked on Quaker farms. They were targets of the infamous 1847 Kentucky Slave Raid.

The two-day event will feature guided tours of Kentucky Raid sites, a living history encampment of the Civil War 102nd U.S. Colored Troops, and all day entertainment at the Ramptown Cabin in Milo Barnes Park.

Four historic sites related to the Underground Railroad will be open for tours: The Victorian James E. Bonine House, 18970 M-60, home of Quaker abolitionists James E. and Sarah Bogue Bonine, and the Bonine Carriage House across the street where fugitive slaves were sheltered; the Stephen and Hannah Bogue House, 20283 M-60 and Brownsville School No. 1, 20559 Osborn St.

Farm-fresh delicacies

Buchanan's Verdant Hollow Farm offers special selection of goat cheeses, meats, produce

Jane Ammeson

Six years ago, I followed a winding country road as it dipped and rose past fields and farmland, all the way to Verdant Hollow Farm (VHF), located on Garr Road outside of Buchanan.

A 225-acre stretch of hilly land dotted with sheep, pigs, chickens and goats, it's an Animal Welfare Approved farm, using regenerative organic practices to produce seasonal vegetables, certified 100 percent grass-fed lamb, goat's milk, heritage pork and more.

But it's also the go-to place for goat hugs (when the baby goats, who are born in the spring, are still young enough to be cuddled – because you probably don't want to hug a grown goat). You can also take a goat hike on the property – an excursion through the fields and woods accompanied by some of the 80 or so goats living on the farm.

I know it seems like I've been writing a lot about goats recently, so I hope you can bear with me for one more column where goats take center stage.

The farm's offerings have grown since I first visited all those years ago. Besides the goat hikes (every Saturday), there's a farm store, open on Saturdays, where you can buy products including goat meat and pork, fresh organic pasture-raised eggs, seasonal vegetables and goat milk soap. They've also started making goat cheese.

VHF, which was founded in 2016, sits on land owned by Susan Flynn, who lives nearby, and is farmed by Amy and Brett Muchow. I was drawn back there four years ago when they received a MDARD Underserved, Value Added and Regional Food Systems Grant, designed to help in converting an existing farm structure into a licensed Michigan farmstead creamery and farm store.

After an immense amount of work, the creamery opened in August 2024. Coincidentally, August is also National Goat Cheese Month. VHF is now one of the few licensed farmstead goat creameries in Michigan. They make a variety of cheeses, including a Farmstead Chèvre, made fresh every week, and a Seasonal Chevre, which contains ingredients like ramps and nettles foraged from their woods and meadows in the spring.

Moonlet is their interpretation of a bloomy rind ash-ripened French Valençay cheese, and Mother-of-Pearl is their take on a bloomy rind French Crottin de Chavignol. They also make a Bulgarian-style feta cheese.

You can join their Cheese Club, which offers a selection of all cheeses available from the creamery at time of pick-up – a mix of chèvres, bloomy rinds and their signature Bulgarian Feta.

Running both a creamery and farm with hundreds of animals – overseeing breeding, spring birthing, milking and everything else that goes along with farm life – is a complex and time-consuming business. It would seem busy enough, but they also plan on adding guest cabins in the future, and currently have an 1860s-era barn, reimagined by award-winning architect Stanley Tigerman, available for rental for those who want to experience a farm-cation.

In addition to various other workers, the Muchows' three sons help out on the farm when they're not in school. The goats are overseen by two large dogs who guard against coyotes and other predators. But ultimately, the Muchows are propelled by their love of the land and a desire to produce wholesome food.

Before the farm, Brett, a National Board Certified Teacher, spent time teaching in South Korea, the South Side of Chicago and Northwest Indiana. Molly was a professional chef. She worked for Flynn, which is how they all met.

Their farm is gaining notice. Houndstooth, a restaurant in Benton Harbor, uses their products. Granor Farm, a 400-acre organic farm in Three Oaks, which hosts wonderful dinners in their 7,336-square-foot custom-made greenhouse every weekend (reservations needed), recently had a dinner using cheeses and meats from VHF.

"We're big fans of Verdant Hollow cheeses," said Alex Skrzypczyk, chef at Granor Farm.

Chef Erin Stanley, the kitchen manager of Granor's culinary team, used Verdant Hollow Farm's chèvre and chèvre with wild ramp and nettle, whipped chèvre butter with assorted breads, Spanish chorizo, marinated olives and farm vegetables to assemble a cheese board.

Their products are not only available at the farm store, but also at a variety of retailers: Farmette in New Buffalo, P&E Bottle Shop in Three Oaks, Granor Farm, Houndstooth, Out There in Sawyer and Stranger Wine Tasting Room in Buchanan. Check out the VHF website for more information (verdanthollowfarms.com).

Houndstooth's Everything Bagel Crunch Salad

For the Everything Bagel Crunch:

2 tablespoons fennel seeds
2 tablespoons black cumin/ Nigella seed
2 tablespoons coriander seed
2 tablespoons poppy seeds
6 tablespoons sesame seeds
1 teaspoon kosher salt
1/2 cup fried garlic
100 grams bagel chips

In a dry pan, toast fennel, cumin and coriander seeds for a couple of minutes, until fragrant.

Place bagel chips in a food processor, grinding until roughly chopped. Add toasted seeds, poppy and sesame seeds, garlic and salt. Pulse to reach uniform consistency (should be the texture of panko breadcrumbs).

Store in dry container.

For the Maple Tahini Dressing:

500 grams tahini
20 grams tamari
20 grams apple cider vinegar
8 grams garlic cloves
28 grams lemon juice
5 grams nutritional yeast
15 grams maple syrup
40 grams cold water
Pinch of salt

In a blender, add all the ingredients except water and salt. Puree until smooth, then add water and salt.

For the salad:

1 bunch kale, washed, dried and chopped into bite-sized pieces
1 to 2 pounds beets, roasted, peeled and chopped

Roast the beets (you can also use pickled or canned), skin and chop into bite-sized pieces.

Wash and drain kale, then tear into small pieces. In a bowl, toss with the dressing, adding a pinch of salt. Mix well.

Assemble: Add the desired amount of goat cheese in the bottom of a serving bowl, using a spoon to line the bottom of the bowl. Add the dressed kale, sprinkle with lots of crunch over the salad and garnish with beets.

Houndstooth's Whipped Goat Feta with Red Pepper Jam

2 ounces soft cream cheese
6 ounces goat cheese or goat feta
2 tablespoon heavy cream
Pinch of Salt
Red Pepper Jam (see note below)

Mix all the first four ingredients together. Place in serving bowl. Top with several dollops of jam.

Note: At Houndstooth, they top their whipped goat cheese ("Verdant Hollow's goat feta would work too," said Cheyenne Galbraith, executive chef and owner of Houndstooth) with red pepper jam made from last year's harvest.

Granor Farm's Whipped Chèvre Butter

"Fresh chèvre and butter are whipped until light and airy, then folded with rosemary, thyme, pink peppercorn and smoked salt," reads the introduction to this recipe from Granor Farm. "This recipe comes from Siam, the newest member of our kitchen team, and was featured during a recent dinner collaboration showcasing Verdant Hollow Farm. The fluffy, savory spread is delicious served with warm bread, crackers or crisp vegetables."

4 ounces fresh chèvre, softened
4 ounces unsalted butter, softened
1 teaspoon fresh rosemary, finely chopped
1 teaspoon fresh thyme, finely chopped
1 teaspoon pink peppercorns, finely ground
1/2 teaspoon smoked salt

In a mixing bowl, combine chèvre and softened butter. Using a stand mixer, hand mixer or whisk, whip vigorously until the mixture becomes airy and fluffy.

Add rosemary, thyme, pink peppercorns and smoked salt. Mix until evenly incorporated.

Taste, adjusting seasoning as needed. Serve immediately, or refrigerate until ready to use. Allow to soften slightly before serving.

Spoon into a serving bowl, creating soft swoops and peaks, and finish with a sprinkle of pink peppercorns, thyme leaves and smoked salt.

■ Thank you to the City of Niles for working out the electricity issues during the stormy weather.

■ Regarding Meijer, why are we not embracing a store that brings jobs, more options and a pharmacy to our area? We lack a pharmacy on the west side of Niles, particularly for Buchanan and Galien areas.

■ I was amazed at the lack of common sense some drivers showed while navigating the electricity outage that affected the Niles street lights. Even without lights an experienced driver should be able exhibit good defensive driving skills.

■ I'm really glad that the townships are seriously putting some thought and research into data centers. I've seen so many communities that have regretted allowing them in their area.

■ It's disheartening that some people can't see the benefits that a new Meijer could bring to Niles.

■ I'm not against data centers. I'm against being kept in the dark on issues pertaining to them and the fear of never being able to open my windows ever again without hearing a loud humming noise.

Home where King planned Selma marches opens at Henry Ford Museum

By COREY WILLIAMS
Associated Press

The Henry Ford Museum President and Chief Executive Patricia Mooradian, left, and Jawana Jackson pose for a photo outside Jackson's reconstructed family home June 12.

DEARBORN — A home where the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and other leaders planned strategies during the Civil Rights movement in the Deep South has been rebuilt at a Michigan museum after being dismantled and hauled from Alabama.

The daughter of the original owners last week helped open the Jackson House on the grounds of The Henry Ford Museum in Dearborn, just outside Detroit. The house is among more than 80 other historic structures in the museum's Greenfield Village.

Several hundred people attended a ceremonial ribbon cutting and cheered as Jawana Jackson and Henry Ford Museum President and Chief Executive Patricia Mooradian walked through the front door of the 3,000-square-foot bungalow.

Jackson said that Ford Motor Co. founder and industrialist Henry Ford built Greenfield Village to tell the story of America. "This, the Jackson family home, is part of that story," she continued.

Owned by dentist Sullivan Jackson and his wife, Richie Jean, the home in Selma, Alabama, was where King and others in 1965 discussed three Selma-to-Montgomery marches against Jim Crow laws that prevented Black people from voting.

King was inside the home when President Lyndon Johnson announced a bill that would become the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

The role the Jackson House played was integral to the Civil Rights Movement. Jawana Jackson contacted the museum in 2022 to have it take over the home's preservation and legacy. The museum bought the home in 2023 for an undisclosed price.

Mooradian called the home a symbol for the support of all and the "pursuit of justice and dignity and equality during one of the most defining chapters in our nation's history."

"We're opening a doorway to history," Mooradian said. "A place where an ordinary family chose to risk their lives to do something extraordinary. A place where conviction was tested. A movement was sheltered and nourished in this home, and where parents led with courage for the sake of their little girl."

In 2023, crews began taking apart the house piece by piece. It was trucked more than 800 miles north to Dearborn, where the house was carefully reconstructed. Original artifacts, including the chair King sat in while he watched Johnson's televised announcement, also were brought north.

Other items found in homes during the 1960s have been added to complete the exhibit.

The house was built in 1912 and served as a guesthouse for Black authors W.E.B. Du Bois and Booker T. Washington, who held "fireside chats" regarding education, religion, the arts, community building and economic sustainability, according to the Alabama African American Civil Rights Heritage Sites Consortium.

Jawana Jackson, who was 4 years old in 1965 and refers to King as "Uncle Martin," connected the home's history in the fight for voting rights during the 1960s with current attacks on those rights.

In April, the U.S. Supreme Court knocked out a major pillar of the law that had protected against racial discrimination in voting and representation. Three years ago, justices voted 5-4 to strip the government of its most potent tool to stop voting bias – the requirement in the Voting Rights Act that all or parts of 15 states with a history of discrimination in voting, mainly in the South, get Washington's approval before changing the way they hold elections.

"We are still trying to protect democracy," Jackson said Friday. "What Uncle Martin did in this house all those many years ago continues today."

Pizza Hut chain will be sold for $2.7 billion

By MICHELLE CHAPMAN AND DEE-ANN DURBIN
AP Business Writers

Pizza Hut, the 68-year-old chain that has long struggled with growing competition and outdated restaurants, will be sold for $2.7 billion by parent company Yum Brands.

Yum Brands said Tuesday that the private equity firm LongRange Capital will buy Pizza Hut, excluding the mainland China business, for about $1.5 billion.

In mainland China, Pizza Hut will be purchased by Yum China Holdings Inc. for approximately $1.2 billion, the company said. China is Pizza Hut's second-largest market outside the U.S., accounting for 19 percent of sales. Yum China Holdings Inc. spun off from Yum Brands and became an independent company in 2016.

Yum Brands, which also owns KFC and Taco Bell, began to explore its options for Pizza Hut in November. Last year, Yum Brands' global sales rose 5 percent but Pizza Hut's sales fell 2 percent.

In February, Yum Brands announced plans to close 250 U.S. Pizza Hut locations.

Sharron Leigh Cooney

January 23, 1941 – March 17, 2026

Born in International Falls, MN on January 23, 1941, she was the only child of Ruth Stone and Arnold Peterson (originally from Bergen, Norway). Sharron moved to Southern Michigan with her mother in 1943, where she subsequently attended a one-room country school, a boarding school in South Bend, IN, high school in Cassopolis, MI, then freshman year at Texas Women's Univ. in Denton, TX, finishing her education at Western Michigan Univ. in Kalamazoo, MI.

After college she moved to San Diego (Pacific Beach) in 1962 and began her career as a legal secretary and later a paralegal. She married and divorced twice before going to work at the Municipal Court, where she met and married Judge Robert J. Cooney. In 1989, the Cooneys retired to their Lake Cuyamaca home. Unfortunately, and too soon, Judge Cooney died in June 1990.

Sharron then began many years of volunteer work. First, returning to the courthouse, then the Julian Chamber of Commerce, the Cuyamaca Volunteer Fire Department and the Julian Triangle Club (serving as club President for 4 years and performing in the Apple Days Melodrama for 19 years).

She thoroughly loved and enjoyed life, traveling often to the British Isles, most of Europe, So. America, Hawaii, Mexico and all but two of the United States. Her favorite holiday was Christmas and it usually took four days to decorate EVERY room in the house. Her gourmet dinners, Mardi Gras and Kentucky Derby parties will be missed by all who knew her. After losing her home in the 2003 Cedar Fire (and then rebuilding in 2005), she remained in Cuyamaca for another 10 years. She sold her home in 2015 and moved to her Baja beach house, where she often said, "Life was perfect."

Having won her battles with stage 4 cancer in 2006, breast cancer in 2018, and a third bout with cancer in 2020 (as well as struggling with diabetes for 16 years), on the advice of her doctors, she moved back to San Diego, settling at Casa Aldea in University City and later at Waterford Terrace in La Mesa.

She was extremely proud of her family and their many accomplishments: son Eric Rapp, daughters Jennifer Rapp and Elizabeth Renshaw; her granddaughters, Dr. Maisie Rapp and Dr. Savannah Morgan, all of whom survive.

Her beloved grandson, Jordan Johnson, predeceased her in 2021.

Her companions, Richard Rose and 12-year-old terrier, Chloe, also survive.

Interment was held at Glen Abbey in Bonita with her grandson and a memorial was held on April 17th at Waterford Terrace in La Mesa, California. In lieu of flowers, donations to ASPCA would be appreciated.

Death notices

Barbara A. Grady, 91, of Cassopolis, Michigan, died June 16, 2026, at Kalamazoo, Michigan. Wagner Family Funerals Connelly Chapel.

Dr. Nancy Lynn Westrate, Ph.D.

March 10, 1955 – June 13, 2026

The world lost a most remarkable woman on the 13th of June 2026, not least because of the intelligence, compassion and courage manifest in her challenging 71 years on this Earth. The life of Nancy Westrate demonstrates just how brilliantly eclectic a modern woman maybe, even in this very confused time.

It wasn't easy for the beautiful little redhead to assert herself in a house filled with brothers, but she nonetheless did. And it soon became clear that, armed with such considerable determination, Nancy would make a name for herself. Always a superb student, she discovered early on a facility with languages which fed a lifelong curiosity about the wider world and its peoples. Nancy's curiosity about these things was insatiable and, at times, boundless.

Unable and unwilling to resist the urge to travel widely, she considered, then rejected a career as a flight attendant, for that of a peripatetic scholar. Nancy graduated from Cassopolis High School in 1972 before matriculating at Michigan State University, from which she graduated with honors in 1976. While there, she conducted graduate research in Merida, Mexico. For this, Nancy was the recipient of the Ella Cowles Award for Outstanding Achievement in Romance Languages in 1976.

She then entered a graduate program in Anthropology at Duke University, where she won a Fulbright Fellowship to conduct research in the foothills of the Andes in Argentina on populist movements in San Juan and Mendoza. In 1993, Nancy was awarded a Ph.D. in Cultural Anthropology from Duke.

She proved an especially fine translator of scholarly works, expertise for which she became particularly well-known during her career as an independent scholar. Especially notable were two works: Corn and Capitalism, by Arturo Warman and Voices of the Enslaved in 19 th-Century Cuba by Gloria Garcia Rodriguez, in which her work was praised by reviewers as "artistically meticulous." Nancy explored widely in Mexico, Central America and South America.

She even travelled to Cuba during an era when special dispensation was required from bureaucrats on both sides of the Cold War. Yet throughout this colorful and fulfilling life, the prospect of family was never far from her primary focus. She met her husband Gustavo De Luca while in Mexico and they married shortly thereafter. He joined her in Durham, entering the school of architecture there, a field in which he would excel.

Together they had four children: Javier (Desiree), Christina Sheahan (foster), Amadeo (Joy), Ansilta, and Oceania. Nancy is survived by three brothers: Bruce (Sally), Joel (Patty), and Eric (Barbara). Her brother Mark (Joan) predeceased her in 2013.

Despite considerable health challenges during her married life, Nancy remained the ever-engaged, ever-present, ever-expectant Tiger Mom who wanted nothing but the absolute best for her children. The wonderful vitality, achievement and devotion of her adult brood most surely confirm her success in this. No less authority than Winston Churchill once pointed out the greatest limitation on his craft: There is no history, he is supposed to have cautioned; there is only biography. By this he meant simply that it was the characteristics of history's elect which account for the causes and consequences of those many storied events over which we tend to obsess.

Yet it is the essence of history's participants, from the famous to the obscure, the altruistic to the narcissistic, the very good to the very bad, which accounts most for the direction of human history, human civilization. In this, Nancy proved an extraordinary participant.

A GoldStars Tribute Wall traveling memorial honors the 7,200 men and women killed while serving in the U.S. military from the beginning of the Gulf War through the Iraq and Afghanistan wars, during Lest We Forget's "The Sandbox Wars," on June 21, 2025, in St. Joseph.

Lest We Forget slates reenactment weekend

Revolutionary War at forefront of this year's event

By PMG STAFF

ST. JOSEPH — Lest We Forget of Southwest Michigan is planning their annual reenactment weekend scheduled for July 18-19 at Riverview Park in St. Joseph.

Previous themes have included World War II, Korea, Vietnam, the U.S. Navy, women in service, the Cold War, the 80th anniversary of the D-Day and Saipan Battles and in 2025 the Sandbox Wars of Desert Storm, Iraq and Afghanistan. This year, Lest We Forget will highlight the semiquincentennial, marking the 250th anniversary of the United States.

The Revolutionary War reenactment weekend will feature camp life, parade of military uniforms and civilian dress, tomahawk throwing, music and dance and two 1776-era war battles per day. The North West Territory Alliance is an American Revolutionary War reenactment organization located in the Midwest, who are taking center stage in St. Joseph this summer.

They have more than 500 members from states as far west as Iowa, east to Ohio, north to the Canadian border, and south to Tennessee. They are a nonprofit that recreates culture, lifestyle and arts of the time of the American Revolution, from 1775-83. They strive to duplicate the uniforms, weapons, battlefield tactics and camp life of the era as accurately as possible.

The weekend begins both Saturday and Sunday with a pancake breakfast from 7-10 a.m. Naturalists from the Sarett Nature Center will give the public rides on the St. Joseph River in its 35-foot voyageur canoe. The canoe, which holds up to 19 people, were used extensively for the fur trade from the 1600s until about 1870, when the French-Canadian voyageurs were trading with Native Americans.

A naturalist will be in the front of the canoe with a steersman in the back, while riders help paddle. Rides are open to any age according to a Sarett spokesperson, but young children must be accompanied by adults. Life jackets will be provided. Rides will last from 20 to 30 minutes.

Military organizations, veteran groups and 18th century history displays are invited to reserve a spot by contacting www.lestweforgetusa.org/contact.

All activities are open and free to the public. Helicopter rides will be offered for $60 cash and $65 credit card.

Lest We Forget will fly a field of 250 flags at Whirlpool Centennial Park, line the fence at St. Joseph High School with flags and has sponsored the bluff stairs mural.

At 6 p.m. July 8, St. Joseph will lift its voice in a synchronized reading of the Declaration of Independence with communities across the nation and the world.

Event organizers said this isn't a reenactment – but a renewal.

"We're inviting every citizen to Whirlpool Centennial Park to witness the Declaration of Independence being read by Pat Moody," the news release stated. "The Declaration's words – 'all men are created equal' – were proclaimed by a small circle of wealthy, well-educated men in powdered wigs, many of whom denied those very rights to others. And yet those words sparked unfinished revolutions: abolishing slavery; restoring and lifting indigenous voices; expanding the vote; welcoming immigrants; empowering civil rights and labor movements; sending girls to school – then into laboratories – legislatures – and low Earth orbit."

Artists prepare for inaugural 'Take A Seat' Chair Auction

By PMG STAFF

NILES — Creativity, community, and local art will take center stage in Downtown Niles on Saturday, August 8, 2026, during the inaugural Take A Seat Chair Auction, a unique fundraiser featuring one-of-a-kind chairs transformed by local and regional artists.

Hosted by the Niles Main Street Design Committee in partnership with the Niles Art Association, the event challenges artists to turn ordinary chairs, benches, stools, and other seating into functional works of art. As pieces are completed, they will be displayed in the windows of downtown businesses, creating a walking gallery for residents and visitors to enjoy in the weeks leading up to the auction.

On August 8, the chairs will be gathered at the NODE at 2nd and Main Streets for public viewing beginning at noon. The live auction will start at 2 p.m., giving attendees the opportunity to bid on original, handcrafted pieces while supporting local arts and community initiatives.

Proceeds from the auction will be shared between the Niles Main Street Design Committee and the Niles Art Association to support downtown beautification projects, public art programs, and future community events.

According to Take A Seat Auction Chairperson and local artist Sandy Williams, the event is designed to celebrate creativity while bringing people together in support of the arts.

"The Take A Seat Chair Auction is a wonderful opportunity to showcase the talent and imagination of local artists while bringing people together in downtown Niles," Williams said. "Each chair becomes a unique piece of art with its own personality and story. We're excited to see the creativity on display and grateful for the support this event will provide to both the Niles Main Street Design Committee and the Niles Art Association."

The live auction will be conducted by Trisha Wainscott of Wainscott Auctions.

"We're thrilled to have Trisha Wainscott serving as our auctioneer," said Niles Main Street Design Committee Chair Fredda Zeiter. "Her enthusiasm and experience will make the auction both entertaining and engaging for bidders and spectators alike."

The fun continues after the auction with a free performance by Van Dyke Revue from 5 to 8 p.m. at The NODE. Known for their crowd-pleasing mix of classic favorites and high-energy performances, the band will cap off a day dedicated to art, community, and downtown Niles.

Visitors are encouraged to spend the day exploring downtown shops, restaurants, and attractions. Food and beverages will be available for purchase from local businesses, and adults 21 and older may enjoy beverages purchased from participating establishments within Downtown Niles' Social District while enjoying the event at The NODE.

Whether you're an art enthusiast, collector, or simply looking for a fun day downtown, Take A Seat offers a unique opportunity to support local artists and take home a truly one-of-a-kind creation.

Spending time with the stars

Cate Christinidis

One of the (many) fantastic things about living in Southwest Michigan is our simultaneous proximity and distance from major metropolises.

We're close enough to Chicago or Detroit to pop over for a concert, but far enough away that our night skies aren't stained orange by city lights.

In college, I took several astronomy courses. At the time, this felt out of character for me – I despised science in high school. But upon entering college, I quickly came to find that I loved it. My professor, Dr. James Lowenthal, played a major role in this transformation, and his determined advocacy for eliminating light pollution stuck with me well beyond graduation.

Growing up just outside the city of Detroit, it wasn't uncommon to see stars. From my backyard, I could point out a number of constellations. But their shine was dim, and I knew there were billions masked by the city's glow.

It's one reason I refer to my late grandparents' cottage, located in rural Wisconsin, as my favorite place in the world; on any given clear night, if I looked up, the sky would be freckled with stars, not an inch left un-dotted. As a child, I thought I was looking at the entire universe.

Recently, that same childlike wonder was reignited by Southwest Michigan's night skies. Arriving home late from rehearsal at Twin City Players, I glanced up, thrilled to see Ursa Major (the Big Dipper) directly above me, like a celestial halo. And, beyond that, sprawled out in every direction, millions upon millions of diamond-bright stars.

Michigan is home to three International Dark Sky Parks, one of which is located in Cass County. The Dr. T. K. Lawless Park, 15122 Monkey Run St., Jones, is both an International Dark Sky Park and a Michigan Dark Sky Preserve.

Numerous times throughout the year, the park extends its hours for late-night stargazing. There are several opportunities this summer: July 17 and 18, Aug. 11 and 12 (Perseid Meteor Shower), Aug. 14 and 15, and Sept. 11 and 12.

A starry sky is certainly a beautiful backdrop for any late evening, but it also gives residents and visitors alike the opportunity to establish a new hobby – or expand upon a pre-existing one.

How can homeowners keep air conditioners running efficiently?

By ANGIE HICKS
Ask Angi (TNS)

Simple seasonal maintenance, like replacing air filters and clearing debris around outdoor units, can help homeowners keep air conditioning systems running efficiently all summer long.
Dreamstime / TNS

As temperatures rise and summer settles in, many homeowners are relying on their air conditioning systems more than they have in months. But after sitting relatively unused through cooler seasons, air conditioners often need a little attention to perform at their best.

The good news is that a few simple maintenance steps can help homeowners stay comfortable, improve energy efficiency and potentially avoid costly repairs during the hottest stretch of the year.

One of the easiest and most important places to start is replacing your air filter. Dirty or clogged filters restrict airflow, forcing your air conditioning system to work harder to cool your home. That added strain can increase energy bills, reduce cooling performance and shorten the lifespan of your system over time. Most homeowners should replace filters every one to three months, though homes with pets, allergies or heavier AC use may benefit from more frequent changes. If you can't remember the last time you changed your filter, now is probably the right time.

Homeowners should also pay attention to the outdoor condenser unit, which plays an important role in keeping air circulating properly. Leaves, grass clippings, dirt or overgrown landscaping around the unit can block airflow and reduce efficiency. Giving the unit at least a couple feet of clearance and clearing away debris can help it run more effectively during periods of heavy use.

Inside the home, small adjustments can also make a meaningful difference. Make sure vents aren't blocked by furniture, rugs or curtains, and pay attention to how evenly your home is cooling. Rooms that suddenly feel warmer than others, weak airflow, unusual noises or a system that seems to run constantly may be early signs that your air conditioner isn't operating as efficiently as it should.

Air conditioning has a way of struggling at the least convenient time usually during a heat wave when you need it most. It's one of those home systems many of us don't think about until there's a problem, which is why a little preventative maintenance before peak summer temperatures can go a long way.

For homeowners looking to maximize efficiency, it may also be worth considering a programmable or smart thermostat. Setting temperatures slightly higher while you're away and cooling the home when needed can help reduce energy use without sacrificing comfort. Sealing drafts around windows and doors or adding insulation can also help keep cool air inside and reduce strain on your system.

Scheduling an annual HVAC maintenance visit is another smart step, especially before temperatures peak. A skilled pro can inspect refrigerant levels, clean coils, test components, and identify small issues before they become bigger and more expensive problems. Seasonal maintenance visits often cost far less than emergency repairs during the height of summer.

Your air conditioning system works hard to keep your home comfortable during the hottest months of the year. Taking a little time now to help it run efficiently can make a meaningful difference in comfort, energy costs and peace of mind all summer long.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Americans should insist on truth

Editor,

It is purported that the fundamental goal in implementing President Trump's America first policy is to make the nation safer strong, stronger and more prosperous, according to Tommy Pickett, a state department spokesperson.

What are Trump's goals? Massive deregulation, sweeping tariffs, tax cuts, drill-baby-drill policies to increase domestic gas and oil, mass deportations, ending birthright citizenship, dismantling of federal agencies, eliminating DEI, ending foreign conflicts and war. And ominously proposing freedom cities on undeveloped federal land that will focus on his above mentioned goals and a new shot at the American dream.

Instead, what we have is a health care crisis, illegal deportations, higher commodity costs and expensive war, tariffs, troubled farming community, and more distrust in government. We have excessive spending on a ballroom, a proposed arch, a reflection pool and an unnecessary war. It is concerning that the present administration does not want input from experts that conflicts with the president's goals and budget priorities. Loyalty prevails over expertise at the expense of independent objective research and scientific based judgment. This approach undermines the credibility of our government and our reputation for integrity among other nations and many in our population.

We need to win back the pre-eminence of our identity as a nation that can be trusted to work with our allies and to promote respect for the rule of law rather than side step it. We deserve the right to insist on truth rather than accept lies for expediency.

Many family and friends held homemade signs, like the one above, which depicts Timothy Johnson's name repeated many times, at a press conference held Thursday at Benton County City Hall.

Photos by Don Campbell / HP staff

Family and friends hold a press conference Thursday at Benton Harbor City Hall to talk about Timothy Johnson, who was killed in an alleged hit and run in Silver Creek Township, according to the Cass County Sheriff's Office. A police investigation showed Johnson, 24, of Benton Harbor, was walking on M-152, when an unknown vehicle hit him.

LEFT: A young boy holds a sign and looks up during the Thursday press conference about Timothy Johnson.

AUTOPSY

"We're just waiting on the autopsy and to wrap up our investigation," Roach said.

During Thursday's rally and call to action, Johnson's father, James Clay of Benton Harbor, said the medical examiner's office had called him, asking if his son had any scars or broken bones.

"I said he had one (scar) on his forehead and one (near) his eye from when he was a little boy," Clay told the crowd.

He said his son never had any broken bones.

Clay said the person from the medical examiner's office had told him that his son was beaten to death – and wasn't hit by a vehicle.

"He said 85 percent of your son's bones were broken – crushed," Clay alleged.

On Thursday, Clay called on Roach to tell the truth regarding the circumstance of his son's death.

"Don't come with a lie because you tell one lie, you've got to tell another lie to cover that one up," Clay alleged. "Just tell the truth. We all make mistakes."

Johnson's mother, Morse Daniels of Benton Harbor, said she misses her son.

"He was a very, very respectful young man – never been in trouble or anything like that," Daniels said.

She said her son went to Cass County to visit a woman he had met online.

After he returned home, Daniels said he went back for a second visit the following week.

"I was at work. I kept on calling him. I kept Facetiming my son. I kept trying to get in contact with him, but he never called me back," she recalled. "He's not like that. He always calls me back."

She said she and Johnson's father went to the funeral home because they wanted to see their son.

"They beat him so bad. I just, I just don't know why anyone could do anything like that," Daniels alleged. "I just don't know how you could do something like that to another human."

Jackson said her brother's death has been very painful for their family.

"It's a lot of pain to lose your children, but to have someone take your child from you and then to have someone else trying to cover it up – come on now," Jackson said. "Are we still doing this in 2026? Are we going back to Jim Crow? Is that what this is? ... We demand justice or there will be no peace."

Jackson said she is urging police to question the woman her brother was visiting in Cass County.

"They're neglecting to look at this as a homicide," Jackson claimed.

She said the family has information it is not sharing with the sheriff's department because they don't trust them.

"I'm not going to say what I know because I'm not going to blow the case, but I know – and they know, too," Jackson said.

She said the family set up a GoFundMe account – called "Justice and Dignity for Timothy" – to perform an independent autopsy and to hire a private investigator.

NURSING

"My mom never finished her nursing degree, but she worked for 30-some years in what would now be called medical assisting at a clinic in Wakarusa. My sister, who was two years older (she also has a younger brother) was going into nursing also," Mikel said. "My grandmother worked as an aide for a long time."

Though she used to return to campus to participate in Steve's Run, Mikel has not been back to SMC since the nursing and health services building expanded in 2019.

"Back then," before the addition of three residence halls, "everyone was a commuter," Mikel said. "I lived with my aunt in Edwardsburg" to shorten the drive. "I had an accident one time on those snowy roads on those S curves on the back road between Edwardsburg and Dowagiac. I slid. The car went up on its side, then came back down in kind of a swampy area."

"It was tough because you had to take 21 or 22 credits to graduate on time," she recalled.

She took advantage of one January break to pick up cross-country skiing for physical education credit. "The other January I did a speech class."

"I had a year of college under my belt," Mikel said, "but I had never worked as an aide or LPN, like a lot of people in my program. They were already comfortable with patient care. I was comfortable with the academic stuff, but I struggled at first with patient care because it was new."

Four daughters, two granddaughters

Mikel married her high school sweetheart the month after graduating from SMC.

Her oldest daughter in Benton Harbor is going to be 42, the youngest in Denver is 30. "We just got back from seeing her. My third daughter just moved around the corner from us so we babysit our granddaughters twice a week. My second daughter died in a car accident in 2004 when she was a (16-year-old) junior in high school (after a job interview at a daycare center). She became an organ tissue donor, so we are active with Donate Life in Indiana," an Indianapolis non-profit organization.

The three surviving sisters are Emily, Mattie and McKenna.

"Our oldest granddaughter, she's 5, and was born on the (Aug. 20) anniversary of Kelsey's accident."

"Working at Memorial for so long," Mikel said, "they were like my second family and really helped me during that time when I came back to work after Kelsey died."

"My parents are still alive," Mikel said. "They're 90 and 87 and live just a mile up the road from us. My brother and sister are also close. My mother-in-law isn't very far away, either, so we have family all around us."

Looking ahead

Travel doesn't loom large on the Mikel's horizon.

"My husband and I like to hike at state parks," Mikel said. "We're going on (Feb. 2) to Pokagon in Angola. We'd like to do a riverboat cruise, like one a friend did in New York. We don't need to do an ocean cruise. I've gone on one and that was enough for me.

"We're looking at downsizing. We have a 100-year-old farmhouse on three acres. We're looking at building a smaller, single-story home in Wakarusa – hopefully, by the end of this year."

Mark retired in October. "He directed a non-profit in Nappanee that was a food pantry, clothing closet and rent, utilities and prescription assistance for our community. He still coaches girls track and cross country at NorthWood High School. We started dating our sophomore year of high school."

"I'm grateful I got into nursing, and that Southwestern had a two-year associate degree," she said. "I wanted a health care field, I like helping new moms and babies. I'm grateful I was able to get those goals met at Southwestern."

Last winter's snow reminded her of her senior year of high school, which coincided with the Great Blizzard of 1978.

"We were stuck in the house for three days before we got plowed out," Mikel said.

Baroda dissolution measure heads to ballot

Disincorporation vote to require two-thirds majority for approval

By DEBRA HAIGHT
Leader Correspondent

BARODA — With Baroda village and township officials at an impasse over establishing a disincorporation commission, Baroda Township officials have gone ahead and put the proposal on the Nov. 3 ballot.

The disincorporation issue first came up last year when petitions were circulated asking for the village to be dissolved or disincorporated. When time ran out on those petitions, organizers collected more signatures and submitted them Jan. 27.

Petition organizers Jim and Joanna Whitehead said earlier that they started their effort to shrink the size of local government and reduce taxes. They questioned why they were paying so much more in taxes as village residents than what they'd pay if they were in the township.

Residents are considering the possible disincorporation of the village of Baroda. The debate over the issue began last summer when petitions were first circulated calling for the dissolution of the village.

Others have questioned whether such an action would actually lower taxes for village residents and asked what the unforeseen consequences could be including taking the focus off of other critical local issues.

Village and township officials initially made plans to form a disincorporation commission to study the issue and make a recommendation to residents before it would be put on the ballot. However, the commission never met after the first scheduled meeting was canceled in March.

Since then, disagreements arose after the township failed to appoint its third member to the commission and also asked the village to remove one of their representatives on the commission.

Baroda Township board members recently voted unanimously to put the issue on the November ballot. Their action came after the Baroda Village Council voted last month to rescind their resolution to form the commission.

The failure to have a disincorporation commission meet and make a recommendation also changes who can vote on the November ballot proposal and how many votes it will take to pass.

If the proposal had been placed on the ballot as a result of the disincorporation commission recommendation, it would have required a majority vote in both the village and township to pass. As it stands now, only village residents will be voting and it will require a two-thirds vote in favor to be approved.

A secondary point of contention between the village and the township is the village's failure to take up a township proposal to hire Wightman & Associates. Wightman proposed to study how the disincorporation could affect the village infrastructure systems, who would be responsible for those systems after disincorporation and possible associated costs of disincorporation.

Wightman proposed doing the work for a $16,000 fee. While township officials signed on to have Wightman conduct the study, village officials have never brought the proposal up for a vote.

Baroda Township Clerk Christina Price said this week she was disappointed in the village's inaction. She said the Wightman study would have given a significant amount of information to voters to help them make an informed decision.

She noted the Wightman study could have also been used by the village to make future plans related to capital improvements and community development beyond any disincorporation decision.

Village officials did not return requests for comment on the Wightman issue.

Agency takes steps to protect Michigan from New World Screwworm

By PMG STAFF

LANSING — The Michigan Department of Agriculture and Rural Development today announced new domestic animal movement requirements designed to keep New World screwworm out of Michigan.

While no detections have been found in the state, confirmed infestations in Texas and New Mexico have prompted MDARD to take proactive action to safeguard against negative economic impact and protect animal health.

Effective Wednesday, June 17, the updated requirements will apply to certain warm-blooded domestic animals entering the state. The specific requirements, which can be found on MDARD's website, vary based on the NWS status of the state or region of origin.

With the announcement of new requirements, MDARD is also launching a NWS webpage dedicated to screwworm background and resources for producers, pet owners and veterinarians. The page will be updated regularly as the department monitors the ongoing threat.

"Michigan is taking decisive action to protect the health of our livestock and pets from New World screwworm," said MDARD Director Tim Boring. "These movement requirements are an important tool to keep this devastating pest out of our state. By staying vigilant, working closely with producers and veterinarians, and acting quickly when concerns arise, we can safeguard animal health and support the resilience of Michigan's agriculture sector."

"This parasitic fly poses a serious threat to the health of our livestock, pets and wildlife when cases go unnoticed, untreated and unreported," said State Veterinarian Dr. Nora Wineland, DVM, MS, DACVPM. "Producers regardless of size and pet owners need to put eyes on their animals daily to check for things like enlarging wounds or signs of irritation. NWS starts as a parasitic worm that can enter an animal through a small break in the skin or an exposed mucous membrane, so close inspection is vital to ensure suspect cases are identified, and appropriate actions are taken to treat animals and stop the spread of the pest."

The following poultry are exempt from movement requirements: Hatching and table eggs and chicks under 5 days of age; National Poultry Improvement Plan Types B, C, D, and J.

Under the new requirements, animals originating directly from an infested premises are prohibited from entering Michigan until that site is officially released from quarantine. The new restrictions also outline requirements for wound care, preventative treatment and documentation for those animals originating out of an area marked by USDA as an NWS Infested Zone or an Adjacent Surveillance Zone.

Animal owners and animal health professionals planning to import animals from states with known NWS detections are strongly encouraged to review the updated requirements and contact MDARD with any questions prior to moving animals.

Screwworm was first added to Michigan s emergency reportable disease list nearly a decade ago. The reportable disease designation requires anyone to report the disease to the State Veterinarian's Office upon suspicion, so appropriate actions can be taken. If you suspect an animal is infected with screwworm, please contact MDARD immediately at (800) 292-3939 during the day or (517) 373-0440 after-hours.

Additional information, including resources for producers and veterinarians, is available on MDARD's new NWS information page. For national updates on NWS outbreaks in Texas and New Mexico, visit USDA's dedicated NWS webpage.

Two Hartford men face narcotics, firearms charges

By PMG STAFF

HARTFORD — Two Hartford men are in custody following a raid and months-long narcotics trafficking investigation.

According to a news release, Southwest Enforcement Team detectives – along with the Michigan State Police Emergency Support Team, Paw Paw Post troopers, K-9 Unit and the Drug Enforcement Administration – executed a residential search warrant on June 11 at a residence on Marion Avenue in Hartford.

Investigators seized one long gun, five pistols, a pistol-to-rifle conversion kit and brass knuckles. One firearm had been reported stolen, and another was determined to be a privately manufactured "ghost gun" that lacked a serial number.

Police said they also seized about 26 grams of cocaine hydrochloride, digital scales, drug-packaging materials, and items commonly used in the manufacturing and distribution of controlled substances.

A 27-year-old Hartford man was arrested and lodged at the Van Buren County Jail on multiple felony charges, including receiving and concealing stolen property, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, and possession with intent to deliver cocaine.

A 62-year-old Hartford man was also arrested and lodged at the jail on multiple felony charges, including possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, possession with intent to deliver cocaine, maintaining a drug house, and resisting and obstructing a police officer.

"SWET and its law enforcement partners remain committed to investigating and prosecuting narcotics trafficking to help ensure the safety and well-being of communities throughout Southwest Michigan," the release stated.

Residents are encouraged to report suspected drug activity by emailing MSP-PROTECT@michigan.gov or by leaving an anonymous message on the SWET tip line at 269-982-8664.

SWET is funded in part by the Michigan High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area program and the U.S. Department of Justice Byrne Justice Assistance Grant (JAG) program and is administered by the Michigan State Police.

Beckwith Theatre Co. to perform '1776'

By PMG STAFF

DOWAGIAC — The founding fathers are set to come to life in the Beckwith Theatre Co.'s latest production.

"1776," a classic Broadway musical created by Peter Stone. Showtimes will be 7:30 p.m. June 26-27 and July 3-4 and 2 p.m. June 27 and July 5. Tickets are $15 and seats can be reserved by calling (269) 782-7653.

The show follows John Adams, Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson as they fight for independence against a deadlocked Continental Congress in a retelling "filled with humor, romance, pathos and tension."

The Beckwith Theatre Co. provided the following synopsis: "The seminal event in American history blazes to vivid life in this most unconventional of Broadway hits. 1776 puts a human face on the pages of history as we see the men behind the national icons: proud, frightened, uncertain, irritable, charming, often petty and ultimately noble figures, determined to do the right thing for a fledgling nation."

By MAXWELL HARDEN

CASSOPOLIS — Construction will soon begin on Sam Adams Elementary's north playground, according to Cassopolis Public Schools.

The district is waiting for approval from the state to get a start date. For safety purposes, both playgrounds will be locked and closed to the public for the time being. Funded by last year's successful bond proposal, the playground project will cost approximately $363,000. District officials believe the project will create a more accessible, inclusive and engaging play space for all students.

"We can't wait to see the improvements and are excited for August when we can see the students enjoying the new area," the district stated on its Facebook page.

Splitter takes over as Bulls coach and promises team will compete every night

By JAY COHEN
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Growing up in Brazil, Tiago Splitter used to watch Michael Jordan and the Chicago Bulls in the middle of the night.

"Hidden from my parents and at 1 a.m., watching M.J. games and rooting for the Bulls," Splitter said with a wry grin.

That was the most successful period in franchise history. Now the Bulls are hoping to start another winning era with Splitter on the sideline.

The 41-year-old Splitter was formally introduced on Wednesday as the 25th coach in franchise history. He brings a wealth of experience that includes seven years in the NBA as a player and a challenging season as the interim coach of the Portland Trail Blazers.

The addition of Splitter is the team's most significant move since Bryson Graham took over as executive vice president of basketball operations on May 4. The 6-foot-11 Splitter emerged from a crowded field of candidates that reportedly included Minnesota Timberwolves assistant Micah Nori, Atlanta Hawks assistant Ryan Schmidt and Wes Unseld Jr., who was on Chicago's coaching staff last season.

While describing why Splitter was the choice, Graham praised the coach's competitiveness and his ability to connect with players.

Izzo furious as Michigan State blows another chance to get it right

By BOB WOJNOWSKI
The Detroit News (TNS)

The president is leaving, the athletic director is leaving, the football coach has barely been around long enough to get his name on a parking spot. And understandably, the basketball coach is furious.

Of course Tom Izzo is much more than Michigan State's basketball coach. He's the face of the school, the emotional touchstone. He's been there 31 years as head coach, fully vested to speak for the university and from the heart.

He must wonder sometimes if anyone listens.

A.D. J Batt, who arrived last June as a celebrated hire from Georgia Tech, is bolting for Kentucky. President Kevin Guskiewicz, who arrived two-plus years ago from North Carolina, recently accepted the same position at Clemson. Guskiewicz and Batt were ambitious and connected, eager to lead MSU through the treacherous landscape of college athletics, and just as they geared up, they felt pushed away.

When Pat Fitzgerald was introduced as the new football coach last December, the excited talk was about "alignment" across the university, from top to bottom. Barely six months later, the offices are empty again and MSU is stuck with a confusing disaster.

IZZO

Daniel Mears / The Detroit News / TNS

Michigan State men's basketball coach Tom Izzo called the departures of president Kevin Guskiewicz and athletic director J Batt "self-inflicted."

"I've had it," Izzo told reporters Monday. "This is self-inflicted. We just lost the best president that may have ever been here, one of the best. And there are other dominoes that get affected when things go wrong like that. I'm very upset about it. And I'm sick of it."

Many Spartans presumably are sick of it, from alums to students to the Hall of Fame coach who's 71, and contrary to his abundant energy, won't be around forever. Mostly, people are disgusted by the infighting, petty politics and lack of a clear, shared vision. Much of the ire is directed at the Board of Trustees, the eight-member panel entrusted with protecting MSU's interests. Governing boards at universities are important oversight tools, but MSU has historically been rife with disagreement.

Guskiewicz cited Board dysfunction as a primary reason for his departure, even spurning an offer to double his salary to stay. In his resignation letter, he blasted away, calling his relationship with the Board of Trustees an "unsustainable situation." He pointedly wrote, "What is perhaps most troubling is the actions of some to abuse their access to privileged and confidential information to misrepresent facts, manipulate situations and selectively use and leak that information to promote personal agendas."

As outsiders, it didn't take Guskiewicz and Batt long to recognize the size of the challenge. Batt launched Spartan Ventures to raise NIL funds for athletes, and almost immediately, its for-profit arm, Spartan Media Ventures, raised questions about third-party stakes in a public university. You can debate whether it's good or bad, but the debate itself is important. Except that it devolved into rabid public arguments about transparency and oversight.

To quell the airing of grievances and leaking of sensitive information, the Board majority approved "revised ethics and conduct standards" and required each Trustee to sign it. Failure to do so could result in public censure or removal. Three trustees – Rema Vassar (D-Detroit), Dennis Denno (D-East Lansing) and Mike Balow (R-Plymouth) – refused, citing freedom of speech and commitment to their duties, before it was approved.

MSU is not the only university to struggle with alignment, as UM has had its own notable disagreements between the president and Board of Regents. Michigan is looking for its fourth president in four years, after Santa Ono departed and president-elect Kent Syverud stepped down because of a cancer diagnosis.

MSU is seeking its seventh president in eight years (counting interims), going back to the 2018 resignation of Lou Anna Simon in the midst of the Larry Nassar sexual assault scandal. That also cost AD Mark Hollis his job, and Hollis said Monday he'd be interested if MSU wanted him back. Finding another AD that fits could be problematic without a permanent president. And finding a permanent president could be problematic considering the power of the Board, which ousted president Samuel Stanley Jr. in 2022.

Like many schools, MSU can be an insular place, a bit of an echo chamber, reluctant to change. That's why it was encouraging when Guskiewicz and Batt barreled in with provocative ideas and fundraising plans, including the securing of a $401-million commitment from donors Greg and Dawn Williams.

That's why it's so discouraging the regime collapsed, necessitating two more delicate hirings. It's not easy to find innovative leaders who also grasp MSU's history and unique challenges. The Spartans' fundraising has been haphazard, going back to Mel Tucker's $95-million contract, partly funded by billionaire alum Mat Ishbia. In that case, differing opinions created dissent, Tucker turned out to be a disaster, and AD Alan Haller ultimately lost his job. It was the type of mistake the new regime was attempting to avoid.

Latest upheavel embarrassing

Izzo called the latest upheaval embarrassing, and it is, especially because much of it is self-inflicted. It doesn't have to be ingrained in the school, even if seems that way. Not long ago, MSU's athletic leaders – Hollis, Izzo, Mark Dantonio – were as successful and powerful as any trio in the country. Because of the monstrous scope of the Nassar tragedy, more people at MSU were impacted than should have been. Leaders were forced out or scattered, except for one.

Izzo, who had nothing to do with Nassar, stood up for his school, loudly and passionately. Every time you wonder if it will break him, he fires back. Just like every time you wonder if he'll keep the Spartans successful, he wins a Big Ten title.

"Still standing, still winning," Izzo said Monday at the announcement of a $40-million sponsorship with MSUFCU (credit union) for jersey patches. "You know, I love my football coach and my hockey coach, those were the first two guys to call me last week. Their words were 'Let's go.' … Because we've been divided, and I don't think it's a 50-50 divide or 60-40 or 80-20, you know? It's a couple people look at things one way, and a lot of people look at it the other way. But it'll be a cold day in hell before I don't think this is still one of the great universities in the country. Why don't we get out of our own way? I don't know."

Izzo is always up for a good fight – with the NCAA, the media, the officials, the NIL mayhem, his rival. The truth is, he doesn't always pick the right battles, and that's where the East Lansing echo chamber hampers him. Much of the fighting is Spartan-on-Spartan, whether among trustees or donors or whoever's picking the next football coach.

"I think 600,000 alums better start rallying together," Izzo said. "I'm gonna ask the alums to stand up because what happened with our president is ridiculous. And he said it, we know the reasons, and I'm ashamed. I'm disgusted, hurt. But we'll see what the Spartan Nation thinks. … I think Michigan State people have to take ownership of their university. We gotta speak up. We gotta band together."

Izzo was speaking to a broad base, but pointedly to the Trustees and other factions that get accused of putting their own interests above the school. It's about how money is spent, how NIL funds are distributed and which programs pay the price, such as the school's disbanded swimming program. To be fair, the trustees supported many of Guskiewicz's moves, including swift approval of the Batt and Fitzgerald hirings, as well as the ouster of football coach Jonathan Smith.

Guskiewicz gave Batt a mandate to modernize and monetize MSU athletics, and that's his strength. He pushed hard and so did the president, and in some ways the pushback was predictable.

"I can't stand what's going on," said Izzo, whose voice is strong and respected, but it's only one voice. Fans and alums may want to fight back but they don't know where to swing and what to hit. The Board of Trustees is the obvious target, and often the right target, but there's blame to go around. Michigan State is a large, renowned institution with a rich history. Too often, it doesn't act like it.

Bobcat baseball quartet earns all-state honors

PMG STAFF

NILES CHARTER TOWNSHIP — The Brandywine baseball team is well-represented when it comes to postseason honors.

Four Bobcats – Hudson Aalfs, Ryder Richard, Kaeden Warfield and Kyler Marshall were named to Division 3 all-state teams. Aalfs and Richard were named to all-state teams at utility and catcher respectively while Warfield and Marshall earned honorable mention recognition at outfielder and pitchers respectively.

The four Bobcats helped the Bobcats earn a Lakeland Conference title as well as the team's first district title since 2008.

SPLITTER

"We are at the ground floor," Graham said. "And so when you have someone that has a vision that aligns with yours, that knows how you want to play, and how to build a program, we just, I mean, we couldn't be more excited."

Splitter joined Chauncey Billups' staff in Portland last June. He was elevated from assistant to interim coach when Billups was arrested in October in a federal takedown of a sprawling gambling operation. Billups has pleaded not guilty to charges of wire fraud and money laundering.

Splitter coached Portland to a 42-40 record and a five-game loss to San Antonio in the first round of the playoffs. It was the first playoff appearance and first time the Trail Blazers finished with a winning record since the 2020-21 season.

"It wasn't an easy situation," Splitter said. "I think, you know, as the season went to the finish, to the end, we almost forgot about it and that was the great thing. ... That was most important thing for me, just like leaving the outside noise out of the picture and focusing on basketball and by the end, you're having like a clear goal and finish the way we finished."

Splitter declined to discuss his departure from Portland.

"I think there's too many things being said already and I think that's enough," he said. "I'm past that and I want to think about the Chicago Bulls."

Splitter spent time with San Antonio, Atlanta and Philadelphia during his playing career. He was selected by the Spurs in the first round of the 2007 draft, and he helped the team win an NBA title in 2014.

He worked for Brooklyn for five seasons from 2018-23, first as a pro scout and then as an assistant coach. He was an assistant for Houston for one year before coaching Paris Basketball Club to a French Cup championship during the 2024-25 season.

That experience – both playing and coaching – was an appealing attribute, Graham said.

"He's got a phenomenal story," he said.

Splitter is replacing Billy Donovan, who resigned after six seasons. The Bulls had conversations with Donovan about returning, but he decided to step aside rather than work with a new front office.

Chicago allowed 121.5 points per game this season, ranking 28th overall in the NBA. It finished with a 31-51 record while missing the playoffs for the fourth straight year.

The Bulls pick No. 4 and No. 15 in next week's draft, and they also have plenty of salary-cap space going into free agency. But Splitter offered a diplomatic answer when asked about expectations for next season.

"I can guarantee you one thing: We're going to compete every night," he said. "And we're going to have high standards with everything that we do."

Rangel uses 'pure reaction' to make save for Mexico

Fernando Llano / AP

Mexico goalkeeper Raul Rangel (1) makes a save on the goal line during the World Cup Group A soccer match between Mexico and South Korea in Zapopan, near Guadalajara, Mexico on Thursday.

By TALES AZZONI
Associated Press

GUADALAJARA, Mexico — With Mexico a few minutes away from securing a spot in the knockout stage of the World Cup it's hosting with the U.S. and Canada, goalkeeper Raúl "Tala" Rangel extended his right arm and positioned his hand perfectly to keep the ball from crossing the line, denying South Korea an equalizer.

The 87th-minute save by the goalkeeper, who is from the Guadalajara region and plays for local club Chivas, sealed a 1-0 win and a first-place finish for Mexico in Group A. El Tri became the first team to advance from the group stage.

"It was very quick, it was pure reaction," Rangel said. "I couldn't really tell you what I saw, because I remember the moment of impact with my teammate and me having the ball. But I think I was really focused, I came through when team needed me, and I'm happy about that."

The 26-year-old Rangel came up big twice in the decisive play.

He stopped Yang Hyun-jun's attempt with his extended arm immediately after he saved a close-range header by Cho Gue-sung. The ball ricocheted up as Rangel collided with a teammate going to the ground, but he was able to block Yang's strike on the rebound.

Rangel got the starting role for the World Cup after an injury earlier this year to Luis Ángel Malagón, Mexico's expected starter in goal.

Coach Javier Aguirre said he felt confident about having Rangel in goal at the World Cup.

"He showed me a lot of determination ever since we called him up for the first time," Aguirre said. "He played very well for his team this season."

Rangel's Chivas plays at Estadio Akron, Guadalajara's World Cup host venue. Luis Romo, who scored Mexico's goal on Thursday, also plays for the club that traditionally only fields players from Mexico.

"Tala is at home, he is happy," Aguirre said. "And I'm happy for him."

Hydration breaks have sparked criticism but what do they do?

By DORANY PINEDA and JENNIFER McDERMOTT
Associated Press

Julio Cortez / AP

England's Harry Kane (9) cools off during a hydration break of the World Cup Group L soccer match between England and Croatia in Arlington, Texas, on Wednesday.

LOS ANGELES — For the first time in World Cup history, FIFA is mandating all soccer players take hydration breaks to protect them from the threats of extreme heat. But the new rule has sparked criticism from different groups.

Some experts have warned that this summer's World Cup – co-hosted by the U.S., Mexico and Canada – could be the hottest in the tournament's history. In response to concerns about extreme heat, FIFA implemented three-minute hydration breaks midway through each half regardless of temperatures or whether stadiums are enclosed or air conditioned. But some critics say they're interrupting the game's flow and give coaches a chance to shift momentum in their team's favor, while some scientists have said the breaks are too short to make a significant impact on cooling and rehydration when conditions are sizzling.

"When we look at the three-minute hydration breaks, we're really looking at this as a way to mitigate anything that could potentially lead to an incident or an emergency," said Joshua L. DeVincenzo with Columbia University's National Center for Disaster Preparedness.

FIFA's mandatory breaks, regardless of temperatures

FIFA said the mandatory breaks are to "ensure equal conditions for all teams, in all matches," and the rules draw upon the experiences of past tournaments, including the FIFA Club World Cup in the U.S. last summer when temperatures soared.

Some coaches said the breaks make sense when temperatures are extreme, but they questioned whether they were necessary at every match. The pauses have also been criticized for interrupting the spectacle for fans, with broadcasters cutting to commercials.

Mexico coach Javier Aguirre said they're making the most of the hydration breaks.

"You can't get on the field but the players can come near you while drinking water and we can give them instructions," he said. "We take advantage to try to correct something during the game, it's something good for the coaches."

Even highly-trained, elite athletes can get heat stress

Athletes pushing themselves physically in hot and humid conditions risk getting what's called exertional heat illness. It happens when the body gets too hot and is accompanied by significant strain on the heart, nerves, muscles and central nervous systems.

Symptoms include muscle cramps, extreme fatigue, impaired performance, headache, irritability, nausea, dizziness, cramping and dehydration.

When internal body temperature exceeds 105 F, athletes might feel confused, aggressive or lose consciousness, said Yuri Hosokawa with the Faculty of Sport Sciences in Japan's Waseda University, in an email, "all of which are characteristic signs of exertional heat stroke and require immediate medical attention." She co-signed a letter to FIFA in May urging stricter heat guidelines for player safety, including that cooling breaks be at least six minutes.

Exertional heat stroke is among the leading causes of death in athletes.

Dehydration also exacerbates the risk. Athletes in the heat can sweat 50 to 67 ounces an hour, and most drink less liquids than they expel. Losing as little as 2 percent of one's body weight to dehydration can impair physical performance.

Ryan Calsbeek, professor of biological sciences at Dartmouth College, said the human body performs better when it's warmer, but there's a critical threshold above which that improvement in performance not only stops, but precipitously drops off.

"Your body starts to really fall apart, you lose the ability to cool off fast enough," he said. "And the physiological mechanisms just break down." That happens when the wet bulb globe temperature, which includes temperature, humidity, cloud cover and wind, reads above about 95 F, though some people will be more heat tolerant.

The increased confusion from extreme heat could impact an athlete's ability to make strategic decisions, he said.

"It's these marginal differences in performance that I think can determine the outcome of a match," Calsbeek said. "If you have individuals that do better in extreme conditions, whether it's extreme heat or high altitude or whatever the case may be, those small differences could play a critical, pivotal role in determining the outcome."

Hydration breaks should be longer, some experts say

The three-minute mandatory hydration breaks are meant to protect players, and referees, from extreme heat illness and help them maintain their physical performance.

Players can cool off and replenish lost water and salt from sweating.

That could mean putting wet, cold towels on parts of a player's body. If done well, that could reduce their body temperature by about 0.22 F per minute, said Douglas Casa, CEO of the University of Connecticut's Korey Stringer Institute who also co-signed the letter.

"Some people can tolerate a little more fluids comfortably and then do intense exercise. Some people can't because it sloshes around in their stomach and they don't feel super comfortable, so they might not drink as much in such a short period of time," he added.

In a 2024 study, researchers found that three minutes lowered athletes' core temperature by about 0.72 F during simulated soccer running in a heat chamber. But this happened in ideal conditions where they drank 350 to 400 milliliters of cold water and draped a cold towel on their shoulders.

Draping ice towels over a player's shoulders can be helpful, but only if they rehydrate as well, said Julien Périard in an email, a study co-author and director of the University of Canberra Research Institute for Sport and Exercise who also signed the letter.

That's why it's important the three minutes be well planned, but "even in ideal settings, the breaks can slightly help but will not eliminate the risk of heat illness in response to a rise in core temperature," he said.

Casa said time dictates the volume of impact, whether from fluid or cooling.

How much time a player needs to recover also varies. "Depending on your body, you might need more or less time. But those kinds of breaks are crucial so that your body isn't just being forced to keep trying to play catch up... to keep trying to cool you down without any kind of rest or a break," said Bharat Venkat, director of the Heat Lab at the University of California, Los Angeles.

As our planet gets hotter, mandating hydration breaks and changing where, when and how sports are played will be necessary.

"No matter what sport you play, there's going to be adjustments that have to be made in the face of climate change, " he said.

On June 12, 2026, the Cassopolis Area Utility Authority had an estimated amount of around 8,000 gallons of sewer spill on to the ground. During scheduled maintenance of an air release valve on the transmission main from Vandalia to Diamond Lake, a control valve broke and sewer spilled out on to the ground until a pump truck could arrive and pump the sewer down and access to the manhole could be regained. Land that was impacted had hydrated lime spread on the area, and the nearby stream will be monitored to meet state testing procedures.

American bittern decline in Southwest Michigan

Eastern garter snake, June 4 at Baroda Township Park.

Don Estep of LaPorte, Ind. photographed an American bittern back on May 3 in a marsh near New Buffalo. The American bittern is a medium-sized heron that remains inconspicuous among the cattail marshes due to its brown and white plumage.

Jonathan Wuepper
Southwest Michigan Wildlife

During the breeding season, the American bittern nests in cattail or sedge marshes bordering ponds and lakes. They also nest in bogs, wet prairies, meadows and, occasionally, hayfields.

During the nesting season in eastern North America, American bitterns can be found from the southern shore of James Bay and central Quebec, south to the Ohio River. However, due to habitat loss, the species is absent in most of Ohio, Indiana, southern Wisconsin and the southern lower peninsula of Michigan.

At the time of European settlement in Berrien County, circa 1830, the American bittern was much more common than it is today. The first local record of the species occurred in about 1880, when it was listed among the species shot by local hunters in the marshes surrounding Benton Harbor.

According to ornithological literature, in the years following WWII, American bitterns became sparse or absent over much of the farming regions of the Great Lakes States. I am unaware of any confirmed breeding observations in Berrien County in the last several decades, although I would not be surprised if they were confirmed to be nesting in Grand Mere State Park, Sarett Nature Center or the Galien River County Park.

Most recent American bittern records from Berrien County likely represent migrant birds. On average, the first American bittern each spring is reported during mid-April. Migration reaches its peak in early to mid-May. In the fall, most American bitterns depart our area by October and spend the winter months in the southern Atlantic and Gulf states, south into Mexico and Central America.

One bird species that has made a remarkable comeback since the mid-20th Century is the bald eagle. One of these majestic birds was photographed by Don Estep at daybreak on May 27 at New Buffalo Harbor. It is believed that this bald eagle is tending to eaglets in a nearby nest!

Bald eagles can be seen in Southwest Michigan during any month or the year, but are most common during the spring and autumn migration. There are likely a half dozen nesting pairs of bald eagles in Berrien County. In recent years, I have been aware of nesting bald eagles in remote areas of the Paw Paw and St. Joseph Rivers.

Brad Anderson submitted a photo of an eastern garter snake, found on June 4 at Baroda Township Park. The eastern garter snake is the most common snake in Southwest Michigan. It is a non-venomous snake found in a variety of habitats, including urban and suburban landscapes.

College football leaders need time to sort out revenue details on expansion

By PAT GRAHAM
Associated Press

DENVER — College football leaders gathered Wednesday to debate the merits of expanding to 24 or 16 playoff teams. They need more time, though, to sort out the details of what could be the most important number – money.

Rich Clark, the executive director of the College Football Playoff, said the meetings between commissioners and a few others were "very healthy" but didn't lead to anything concrete.

"We've got a lot on the table to just help us to continue to move the ball forward," Clark said. "We have a little homework to do coming out of there. ... We have a good idea what we need to bring back to them to help them with their decisions."

They will keep studying the impact that expanding the playoff from 12 to 16 or 24 teams could have on venues, the schedule, the future of now-imperiled conference title games. And, of course, how much extra games might go for on the open market.

Southeastern Conference commissioner Greg Sankey has lobbied for 16 teams, while Big 12 and Atlantic Coast Conference leaders have widely agreed on their preference for a 24-team scenario that the Big Ten first put forward and still supports.

The playoff expanded from four to 12 teams in 2024, but after executives failed to reach an expansion agreement, the CFP will use the same model for the 2026-27 season.

"I feel like we made progress and sometimes, even though you don't get to the answers, you understand more about what you need to get to the answer," Clark said. "My goal is for us to make the most informed decision that we can. If it takes time, I would rather be deliberate about this than rush into something that was half-baked or not fully thought through."

September meeting

The next meeting for the leaders of college football is slated for September, but another could be scheduled if they're "able to gather the facts and the information that they need," Clark said.

Like how scheduling might work and, of course, maybe more insight into revenue.

Kansas' Peterson among top guards in NBA draft

By AARON BEARD
AP Basketball Writer

Eric Gay / AP

Illinois' Keaton Wagler celebrates after Illinois beat Iowa in an Elite Eight game in the NCAA tournament on March 28.

Darryn Peterson looked every bit like a possible No. 1 overall NBA draft pick as a Kansas freshman — when he was on the court.

The 6-foot-5, 199-pound combo guard averaged 20.2 points but missed 11 games with a variety of injuries and illnesses.

He headlines a position featuring freshman top-10 prospects in Arkansas' Darius Acuff Jr., Illinois' Keaton Wagler, Louisville's Mikel Brown Jr. and Houston's Kingston Flemings.

Here's a look at the some of the top guards entering Tuesday's first round:

Darryn Peterson, Kansas

STRENGTHS: The scoring playmaker can attack off the dribble, in the halfcourt and in transition.

He shot 38.2 percent on 3-pointers, hitting six 3s in a win at Oklahoma State. He shot 82.6 percent at the foul line and got there often, logging six games with at least eight attempts – including one with 16 (against TCU in the Big 12 Tournament) and another with 15 (while scoring a season-high 32 points in an overtime comeback win in his first meeting with TCU).

He also averaged 4.2 rebounds and 1.6 assists.

CONCERNS: The frequent uncertainty about his day-to-day status is a variable NBA teams will evaluate.

He had a full-body cramping issue requiring hospitalization before the season. Beyond missing time, he sometimes had limited minutes – even abruptly checking out of games – to create headaches despite the high-end talent.

There was at least a positive finish: he logged 37 minutes (against Cal Baptist) and 36 minutes (against St. John's) in two NCAA Tournament games.

Darius Acuff Jr., Arkansas

STRENGTHS: Offense stands out for the 6-2, 186-pound freshman and first-team Associated Press All-American.

He led the Razorbacks to their first Southeastern Conference Tournament title in 26 years and the Sweet 16.

Acuff ranked third nationally in scoring (23.5) and 14th in assists (6.4). He thrived as the ballhandler in pick-and-roll plays (rated "Excellent" in the 89th percentile by Synergy) and in isolation (rated "Very good" in the 74th percentile). He was electric in scoring a program freshman-record 49 points in a double-overtime loss at Alabama, along with posting 91 points and 12 3-pointers in three SEC Tournament wins.

CONCERNS: Defense is a significant question, including handling matchups against bigger guards.

Keaton Wagler, Illinois

STRENGTHS: The 6-5, 188-pound freshman went from a four-star recruit to second-team AP All-American in the Illini's first Final Four trip in 21 years. He showed an all-around skillset with the size to play on or off the ball.

He averaged 17.9 points, 5.1 rebounds and 4.2 assists. He shot 39.7 percent on 3s, including hitting nine 3s in a 46-point outburst against Purdue. He earned "Excellent" ratings from Synergy as the pick-and-roll ballhandler and with his jumper in off-the-dribble, catch-and-shoot and contested opportunities.

CONCERNS: He has a slim build that could cause him to struggle against stronger opponents and he lacks elite athleticism.

Mikel Brown Jr., Louisville

STRENGTHS: The Louisville freshman offers big scoring potential with good size (6-5, 180) after averaging 18.2 points and 4.7 assists. The highlight was his 45 points and 10 3-pointers in a blowout of N.C. State, breaking the Atlantic Coast Conference freshman scoring record set by 2025 No. 1 overall pick Cooper Flagg.

CONCERNS: He'll need time to add strength and grow into his frame. He also battled back issues that sidelined him for eight games at midseason and then resurfaced to sideline him for the last six, including two March Madness games.

Kingston Flemings, Houston

STRENGTHS: The 6-3, 183-pound freshman was a third-team AP All-American as a lead guard with potential to be disruptive defensively.

He averaged 16.1 points, 4.1 rebounds and 5.2 assists while shooting 47.6 percent overall, 38.7 percent on 3s and 84.5 percent on free throws. He showed the ability to pressure teams in transition or off the bounce. He had a Cougars freshman-record 42 points in a loss to Texas Tech and finished with a nearly 3:1 assist-to-turnover ratio.

Flemings ranked in the top six among tested combine players in lane-agility time, shuttle run and three-quarter-court sprint.

CONCERNS: He'll need to add strength to handle physical play, while shot mechanics have been discussed as an area needing refinement.

Others of note:

■ BRAYDEN BURRIES: The 6-4, 215-pound freshman from Arizona is a combo guard with a sturdy frame and two-way potential. He's a top-10 prospect who shot 39.1 percent from 3-point range and was fourth at the combine in standing vertical leap (35 inches).

■ LABARON PHILON JR.: The 6-3, 176-pound sophomore from Alabama was a third-team AP All-American after averaging 22.0 points and 5.0 assists. The potential late-lottery prospect boosted his shooting efficiency (50.1 percent overall, 39.9 percent on 3s) while thriving as the ballhandler in pick-and-rolls (94th percentile in Synergy).

■ CAMERON CARR: The 6-5, 184-pound sophomore transferred from Tennessee to Baylor, averaging 18.9 points, 5.8 rebounds and 2.6 assists. The first-round prospect ranked among combine leaders in standing vertical leap (second, 38 inches) and max vertical leap (third, 42.5).

■ BENNETT STIRTZ: The 6-3, 186-pound point guard went from Division II to Drake to Iowa, leading the Hawkeyes to their first Elite Eight since 1987. The first-round prospect averaged 19.8 points, 4.4 assists and 1.4 steals. Synergy rated him as "Excellent" as the ballhandler in pick-and-rolls (91st percentile) and finishing at the rim (90th).

■ DAILYN SWAIN: The 6-7, 211-pound wing transferred from Xavier to Texas, where he averaged 17.3 points, 7.5 rebounds and 3.6 assists. The first-round prospect showed active hands by averaging 1.6 steals but shot just 29.3 percent on 3s through three seasons.

■ CHRISTIAN ANDERSON: The 6-1, 180-pound sophomore from Texas Tech was a third-team AP All-American who averaged 18.5 points while ranking fifth nationally in assists (7.4).

He's a bit small but projects as a scoring playmaker who shot 40 percent on 3s over two seasons.
